

Giving New Meaning to the Term Angel Investors:

Kid's Counselor Offers Financial Advice to Youth

Often, the aftermath of the holidays is incurred debt, and consequently family strife. National poverty statistics tell us nearly 13 million American children live in families with incomes below the federal poverty level. And, since most families need twice the federal poverty level to make ends meet, over 28 million children will be living in a low-income family this year –a situation that will impact their health, goals and their relationship with money.

Grief and family counselor Carrie Carter grew up struggling with the parochial nature of schools which didn't really hone what she later discovered to be an entrepreneurial spirit. In her work and in her experience as a parent and grandparent, Carter has come across hundreds of kids like herself and so has contrived a new formula for success for children who don't fit the traditional model in her latest book Think Your Way to Riches: Kids' Style.

Written in a workbook style, children learn to define and hone their passion early on, an urgent groundwork for many kids who may not have a parent or adult in their life to do it for them. And, Carter hopes Think Your Way to Riches Kids' Style's simple format will encourage parents to think about their future differently, as well. In Think Your Way to Riches Kids' Style, Carrie Carter addresses:

- Beating the limitations and changing the constructs society puts on children with A.D.D. and other learning disabilities
- Growing money as a kid: piggy bank to high-interest yield accounts
- Children's confidence and their relationship with money
- Child debt
- Incorporating the power of desire, self-suggestion, emotional change and other tenants normally applied to adult's fiscal success in a child's plan for herself.
- Youth spending in the United States
- Do we have financial guardian angels?
- How we teach boys and girls differently about money

With these contexts in mind, Carrie Carter has set out to empower children as leaders of their own fiscal destinies. Written in a magical and fun way, Think Your Way to Riches Kids' Style makes planning a child's economic success a fun family activity.

For more information or to arrange an interview with Carrie Carter at 810.252.2281 email: carrie114cr@aol.com or visit: www.ThinkYourWaytoRichesKidsStyle.com